John J. Barry said he thought this the proper place to discuss questions.

J. M. Keating then proceeded with his remarks, in which he said Mr. Walker was correct. The resolution of the executive committee would have bored for the success of the party, and wished above all things to see it adhere to its usages and principles. He was sorry had the committee sprung this question at such an hour? Was it slways to be give way and crawl upon their bellies in the dust before those who were not Democrats, and who were never appeaced unless they had their way? Was it always to be so? Was it a crime to be a Democrat? Should he, as a Democrat, with a party of three or four thousand voters, be compelled to give away his name and principles simply to secure two or three hundred voters who had neither party nor political principles. He hadino schemes to carry out, no man to nominate, had no purpose but that of the success of the Democrat-ie party. He wanted to save the Democratic party from defeat and to conserve its policies, for he had been a Democrat all his life, and had labored for the Democracy of Tennessee for twenty years,

He had labored for the party when those before him were at home er joving ease and comfort. He appealed to them in a broad, liberal and generous spirit to stand together as Democrats, and to make a platform so liberal that every man of heart and good sense would unite with the party upon it. Healso appealed to them to select for mayor, councilmen and aldermen men of unquestioned ability and integrity, and place them on a solid platform, then there would be no question as to success. As it is, he be-lieved, it was even now only a question of platform, a question of good, honest men, and a question of intentions. Un less they gave out a clear and sensible platform, and selected as their candi-those who favored "a citizens' nomination." He again alluded to the resolution of the executive committee, whose said it would make the convention "a citizen's convention" instead of a Democratic if followed out. The action of the committee robbed the convention of its partisan lebaracter, slthough the committee had been ap pointed by a partisan (Democratic) mass meeting. He alluded to the fact that the Avalanche said that the committee had made the movement a peolected by a non-partisan conference. This, if right, would have saved a world of trouble and vexation. But the people were opposed to nominations by committees or mass-meetings, and indicated this plainly when Mr. Lacey was nominated by the "citizens' conference." What now were they to do in the present condition of the city? What could be done to relieve the city of its

COMMITTEE ON ORGANIZATION. Captain W. R. Lucas, on behalf of this committee, presented the following report, which was adopted. MEMPHIS, December 2, 1875.

OFFICERS ELECTED. The election of officers being next in order, Mr. S. J. Camp nominated Colonel J. J. DuBose for president, but this gentleman declined. Colonel M. Magevney, sr., member of the city Democratic executive committee from the eighth ward, said that at a meeting of said committee he was authorized to select five citizens of this ward who should act as a sub-committee to assist the executive committee in the selection of delegates to the convention. He had seen the gentlemen whom he selected for this sub-committee, and had chosen them because he knew them better, and knew also that they were hard workers. These gentlemen select-ed were Messrs. S. J. Camp, J. J. Du-Bose, Wm. Featherstone, Jack Water and H. Seessel, sr. Colonel DuBose, being called upon, said every one who joined the club would be expected to east his vote in the primary election, and to support the nominee of the Democratic convention. It was an old and cardinal theory with the Democratic party to prefer measures to men, and to abide the action of its convention. They should hew to the line and be liberal in their views. Democracy meant the rule of the people, and while he did not wish to discuss questions which were already in the platform, and selected as their candi-press—for he believed himself to be as dates honest men, the canvass might as good a Democrat as any in town-be good a Democrat as any in town—be would say that it had always been the parties in Memphis—the Republican, rule of the Democratic party to be liberal and stretch out its arms to all. He did not believe it was good policy to organize the Democratic party on the lines of ante bellum days. They could only take the word of any man as to his being a Democrat.
